Aim and Objectives

Data security and data breaches are important to solicitors and their firms. Practitioners owe significant confidentiality obligations to their clients, which include taking measures to keep data secure. Practitioners may need to advise clients on data security issues or advise individuals who are affected by a data security incident.

This is a practical session, with examples, which aims to give guidance to practitioners in order to assist them in keeping data secure and dealing with a data breach. As well as giving guidance on how to advise a client. The speaker is a leading expert in this field and will share his knowledge and expertise with delegates.

Topics to be covered include

- Legislative provisions under the GDPR and the Data Protection Act 2018 relevant to data security and data breaches
- Data Protection Commissioner's guidelines
- Appointing service providers
- How to respond to a data breach
- Personal data breach notifications and considerations
  - Notification to the Data Protection Commissioner
  - Notification to the data subject
- Post reporting, including
  - Potential DPC enquiries
  - Potential investigations
  - Potential data subject enquiries
  - Ongoing controller investigation and resolution
- Clients and their data security and data breaches
  - potential division of responsibility in medium to large client organisations
  - potential division of responsibility in smaller client organisations
- Coronavirus and data security
